Willie, the colored proprietor of Sunflower Street's barber shop, recently informed the crowd it was a boy.

"Whut you name him?" asked Bubber.

"Well," said Willie, "de furst chile is name Eeny, an' de nex' chile is name Meeny, an' de third one is name Miny—so dis last one must be name Moe."

"Eeny, Meeny, Miny an' Moe, huh?"

"Dat's right."

"When you is walkin' de flo' wid Moe," said Bubber, "you kin nickname him 'No-mo'."

"Ao' den, in dis dream," said Beulah, "de trumpets blow an' de gates open an' you come ridin' in on a snortin' horse."

"Me on a horse, huh?" said Bubber.

"Ao' you climb down off de horse an' puts a box at my feets. De box is solid gold wid diamon's all ovch de outside, an' wen de box is open — guess whut's inside?"

"Whut?" asked Bubber.

"Jus' try an' guess," said Beulah. "Whut was in de gold an' diamon' box?"

"Poke chop san'wiches?" guessed Bubber.

Beulah and Bubber, the lovers of Sunflower Street, are really opposites—one is romantic and the other is hungry. "Sunflower Street" is a new comic which will appear in
